

We are residents of Ridgewood Park, a neighborhood just east of the swimming pool at Westside Park. As such, we have found ourselves in the midst of the experimental reconfiguration of NW 8th Avenue over the past months. Collectively we use this stretch of road hundreds of time per day. During the pre-alteration, proposal stage we often found ourselves on different sides of this contentious project. Following many months of experience with this "roughed out" version of the proposed design we are now very supportive and enthusiastic regarding the approval of the project and its implementation.

There have been many benefits and none of the negative consequences originally projected. Traveling this wooded stretch of road more slowly and casually multiple times each day has resulted in a cumulative quality of life enhancement that is particularly worthy of mention. While it is subtle, it is also significant and should be of high consequence to the Commission as our community leaders. It takes (or lessens) the "edge" off one little part on our day. Does anyone really benefit from rushing ~~from~~ the equivalent of 8 blocks?
