It is difficult to say because of how hard city government is to navigate. Many opportunities are not accessed by the public because of the process. So perhaps those Departments of Doing for Business, Play, and Living.

It would also be beneficial for the City to become more helpful in facilitating the efforts of our great businesses and nonprofits in general. Form more partnerships for services versus the current bloated model. One example is a Medieval Faire with a budget of $308,775, plus $50,000 annually from VisitGainesville, and a School Board that further subsidizes the program by having every 6th grader attend on opening day. What might private and nonprofit partners do with what is likely $400,000+ in total funding?

I would also like to see you add someone who provides better questions both for these surveys and the telephone town halls. The very last question for instance, fails to account for opportunities such as the half cent sales tax opportunity. Or at least does so in a manner that allows one to misconstrue a correlating answer for a specific tax in a way that shows approval for all possible taxes.

I miss the Parks & Rec classes that were available to me in Tempe, AZ. Some of these are available through the University, but it would be nice to have them more publicly accessible. Gainesville isn't big enough to support as extensive of a program as Tempe, but see http://www.tempe.gov/city-hall/community-services/classes-leagues for an idea of their programs. Most of the classes were taught by ASU grad students or adjunct faculty, so there was a strong connection between the university and community programs.

Better bicycle lanes/paths. In particular, the path on NW 23rd Avenue between NW 55th St and NW 83rd St, there is a bike path that is extremely difficult to use due to roots tearing up the pavement. Many Santa Fe students (myself included) and residents of neighborhoods along 23rd Ave. bike and walk on that path every day, and it desperately needs to be repaired.

Better homeless initiatives should be considered, especially transportation services to and from Grace Marketplace/Dignity Village. Additionally, bike lane infrastructure should be better protected for the cyclists! A simple concrete barrier between bikes and traffic can go a long way. There has been some progress in areas around town on this front, but as a student and resident of the town, I do not always feel safe riding my bike away from campus. Otherwise, I am very impressed by the services the city provides! I hope to volunteer myself after graduation and expand community engagement in our town.

Everything seems to be geared for younger kids or college students, and the teens really have nothing aside from the possum creek skate park. I would like to see vibrant recreation centers that are free, well-staffed, and filled with activities teens would enjoy; not a few broken pool or fuzball tables. I don't know enough about all the programs and services provided to determine this; there are probably some that if I did know about them, I might say yes. Generally, though, I have seen much more money wasted on poor transportation decisions than on city programs. The 8th Ave. debacle is an excellent case in point, wasting money and resources to stripe, barrier-and-stripe, re-stripe, re-restripe ... all because too many of our commissioners believe (contrary to all evidence, precedence, or logic) that reducing vehicle lanes and painting bike lanes will encourage people to stop driving and start biking everywhere. That money could have been so much better spent.

I think the cities approach to giving everything free to the homeless is wrong. Its attracting a crowd that doesn't care about this city or the people who actually pay taxes.
